45th United States Colored Troops

By Terry Lowry

During the American Civil War, approximately 178,000 African Americans served in the Union military forces in units most often referred to as United States Colored Troops (U.S.C.T.). The regimental officers of the Colored Troops were commissioned white officers. The nearly 170 organized African American troop units were involved in 449 engagements, of which 39 were major battles. Most Americans learned about African American participation in the Civil War through the movie “Glory.”

Although the 45th Regiment, United States Colored Troops, was primarily credited to the service of the state of Pennsylvania, two companies of the regiment, comprising some 232 men, were credited to the new state of West Virginia. The men were recruited in the summer of 1864 at Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, and fought at such Virginia battles and locations as Arlington Heights, Chaffin’s Farm, Fair Oaks, the Petersburg Campaign, and the Appomattox Campaign. They also served in Texas immediately after the Civil War itself ended. As a result of their service in the Union Army through the state of West Virginia, each man who served in one of the two companies became eligible for a medal from West Virginia in recognition for his service.

The Archives and History Library has a document identified as “List of colored men mustered into the service of the United States, to the credit of the State of West Virginia, since April, 1864. Assigned to the 45th Regiment U.S. Colored Troops.” The list names each soldier, his date of enlistment and “Remarks.” Not all entries contain added information, but the remarks sometimes include county and state of birth, a valuable clue for tracing the identity and descendants. The original list is in papers of the West Virginia Adjutant General and a bound photocopy is available in the Library Reading Room collection. Other documents relating the day-to-day operations and administration of the companies are included in the Adjutant General’s papers, but no documents with personal information about individual soldiers are in the collection.

Most of the medals earned by the soldiers of these two companies remain unclaimed at the West Virginia State Archives, not necessarily because tracing African American family history is more difficult, but because most of the men were not West Virginians. Their living descendants, who are less likely to be West Virginians, probably are not aware of the existence of the West Virginia medals. A descendant of a man (or of his close kin) named on the list of unclaimed medals who can show documented lineage of himself/herself to the specific soldier may file a claim for the medal issued to that man. Visit our Web site at http://www.wvculture.org/history/medals.html for a list of unclaimed medals and complete information on the origin, history and claim process for West Virginia Civil War medals, or see the December 2002 Archives and History News, http://www.wvculture.org/history/1202news.html, to read an article about the West Virginia medals. Linda Fluharty has a wonderfully informative site on the 45th West Virginia which includes the roster as well as a list of the 45th’s soldiers whose names appear on the list of unclaimed medals: http://www.lindapages.com/45/cw-45us.htm.

DONATIONS

We have not noted individual donors for the past few months due to time and space constraints. We very much appreciate both the individual authors and the genealogical/historical societies who donate copies of their books and other materials to the West Virginia Archives and History Library. The majority of new titles added to the book collection are through their generosity and their recognition of the importance of both preserving their work and making it accessible to a wider audience. This month’s New Titles List provides a good overview of those who typically donate to the Archives and History Library.

Carolyn Moss used Archives resources in researching her booklet about Kate Field, a staunch supporter and defender of John Brown. The DAR Patriot Index is the most recent of many donations by the John Young Chapter, NSDAR, Charleston, WV, whose current and potential members frequently research their Revolutionary ancestral ties in the Archives and History Library. Local historians Ed Thomas and Don Seabolt donated information about places important to them and to researchers in Charleston and Wirt County, respectively. Ed Robinson sent a copy of Summers County, a pictorial work published by Arcadia for which he obtained copies of photographs in the State Archives collection. Family historians Rebecca Wright, Emily Pritchard Cary and Ralph Hall Sayre made sure the Library had the most recent editions of their family histories, and have assured us they will continue to do so as they update their works. West Virginia poet Mark DeFoe first became aware of the Archives and History Library’s need for works by West Virginia authors several years ago and now faithfully sends us two copies of his new books as they are published.

Without donors like these the West Virginia Archives and History Library would not be able to offer the rich buffet of history and genealogy currently found on the Library’s shelves. The bulk of our limited acquisitions funds are of necessity dedicated to maintaining our extensive collection of West Virginia newspapers. We must not only subscribe to each paper individually, we must then purchase commercially-produced microfilm copies when available, or microfilm them in-house for preservation and storage purposes. None of these services or materials can be donated or offered at reduced cost, leaving us with no flexibility in making acquisition choices; therefore, we are grateful for gifts of books that we would otherwise be unable to obtain. Although we are not always able to recognize donors individually in Archives and History News, each donor receives a letter of appreciation from Fredrick H. Armstrong, Archives and History director, and a bookplate identifying the donor is placed in each book.
