Otterbein Church Jackson County, WV
Section number 7 Page 2

Located along old U.S. 33, now Co. Rt 87/11, the Otterbein Church rests behind a walled frontage with a benchmark insert "L 108" dated 1956.

The church faces the road with concrete steps leading up to the building. The cemetery lies off to the left, or northwest, of the church. A small frame noncontributing privy is behind the building. The site has large trees on the southeast side, and cedars and pines flank the front walk.

The one story church is clapboard with a vertical wainscoting running along the lower portion of the building. The church has two front doors flanking a center three-angle bay window. All the window openings have a pointed transom and 2/2 double-hung sash. Between the transoms of the bay window are wooden shingles, and the transoms have a dentil trim. Above the center bay is a circle plaque with the inscription: "OTTERBEIN/U.B./ OCT. 25, 1896/CHURCH". The "U.B." for United Brethren has been painted over but can still be discerned. The bay is topped by a square tower with rectangular vents on each side, small brackets, and a hipped-pyramidal roof with small metal finial. The roof is gabled with asphalt shingles, and the building rests on dressed stone piers. The two long sides of the building have three windows, and the rear has no openings.

The interior has plaster walls with oak wainscoting and window moulding, and a wooden floor. The Gothic windows have roundel blocks at the upper sash line. All the windows have a rough textured glass in the two operating sashes, and color in the center of the transom design. The two exterior doors open into small vestibules with the door to the sanctuary operating with a rope and pulley to quietly close the door. The interior doors have five panels with a small 2" square roundel in the corners of the panels. Operating three-light transoms are over the interior doors.

The church has one step leading to the altar area situated in the bay window, with a center pulpit. The old wooden pews face the front of the church and run up a slight incline to the rear of the building. The light fixtures are early twentieth century and hang from the ceiling by metal tubing, with an opaque glass globe.

The cemetery is modest and dates to roughly 1864. The funeral art does feature Victorian designs primarily of marble with open books, lambs, roses, pointing hands, and obelisks with Bible and draped cloths with tassels. The graves include the Cunningham family, which donated the land for the church, founding members, and several early pastors such as Rev. Joseph Sayre, and Rev. Jacob Batchel. A later more modern cemetery addition across the street is not being considered at this time.

The building is in excellent condition and there have been no alterations to the design. Building materials reflect the original construction. Otterbein Church reflects the architecture of the small rural churches in Jackson County. The cemetery is contributing for its artistic merit.

Otterbein Church is being nominated under Criterion C for Architecture, and Criteria Consideration A. The building reflects the period of 1896 when it was constructed in rural Jackson County. The adjoining cemetery is included under Criteria Consideration D.

The United Brethren denomination began as the German Reformed Church in 1752, when Philip William Otterbein left Germany to be a missionary to the "wayward Dutch" in Lancaster, Pennsylvania. Working with Martin Boehm, they served in an evangelistic capacity in German settlements in Pennsylvania and Maryland. The United Brethren Church developed over differences beginning to be expressed about 1805.

Later, Rev. Moses Michaels began preaching in nearby Mason County in the early 1830s. A circuit in Jackson County developed with a minister making the rounds of several sites. Services for the United Brethren Church were held in the courthouse and in other churches from roughly 1858 until different churches were built for the denomination in various parts of the county. These churches included: Antioch (1883), Barnett/Mt. Olive (org. 1856), Mt. Moriah (1896), Otterbein (1864/96), Pleasant Ridge (1880), Ripley (org. 1887/1925), and Rockcastle (1879).

Land for the Otterbein Church was donated by William and Elizabeth Cunningham to a Board of Trustees in 1864. The one acre piece of land bordered their farm in western Jackson County in the Angerona Community. At the same time they donated land nearby for a school house called Walnut Grove. At that time the first church was built and stood for 30 years.

In the mid-1890s a decision was made to tear down the first church to build a new sanctuary. The present church was built and dedicated on October 25, 1896, by Bishop N. Castle. A description of the dedication reads:

"The house is a beautiful frame structure, 30x51 ft. It is the most beautiful country church in the bounds of the Columbia District, an honor to the community in which it is located, and an honor to the denomination. It was completed at a cost of $1,144.78, there being a debt of $430 to be provided on the day of dedication.

Those who were instrumental in building the church were Sayres, Staats, Hunts, Crows, Stewarts, Harpolds, McKowns, Norrises, Witherowns, Greers, Kings, McIntyres, Castos and Cunninghams. Many of these names appear in the cemetery next to the church and the later addition across the road. The church is a single story, white clapboard building in original condition. The design is unusual with an angled bay in the center front facade, containing the altar and pulpit. Layout of the church with the two front doors follows a design said to have been built by Philip Otterbein in the 1770s. The design intended one side for men, the other for women.

While many of the churches in Jackson County are one story and frame, no others seem to have the center bay window. The design of the two front doors seem to have been popular locally with the United Brethren and Methodist denominations. Architecturally the simple church has remarkable details, with the center bay having the wooden shingles on the facade, popular in the Queen Anne period, and the pointed transoms with the dentil design. The interior doors are uniquely fashioned with roundels in the corners of the paneled doors.

The United Brethren Church merged with the Evangelical Church in 1947, forming the United Brethren Evangelical Church. The church merged again in 1969 with the Methodist Church. In 1986, the building was purchased from the United Methodist Church Conference by friends and community residents who repaired the building to its present condition. The Otterbein Memorial Cemetery Corporation has a Board of Trustees that is responsible for the upkeep of the church building and cemetery.

The Otterbein Church is a simple rural church yet it exhibits some distinction in its architectural design in Jackson County with its unusual angled front bay. Constructed at the close of the 19th century, the two door church plan seems to follow the old way of division of the sexes, vs the more common single front door. The cemetery adjoins the church and exhibits fine funerary designs of the Victorian period.
